GATEWAY TO JOBS

1. It's your job to sell yourself. If you don't do it, then you can be sure that no one else will. Most of us understand this, but that doesn't mean that we're all comfortable with it. There is no need to bloat your accomplishments or make false claims, but there is every need to paint the best picture of yourself. If you're feeling apprehensive about this idea, then remember: it's not bragging if you did it.

2. Apply to fewer jobs. When you need a job, it's easy to shotgun your resume in 100 different directions. And that is exactly why the stack of resumes is so high for that job you want. Everyone is sending out the same resume to every job they can find. Slow down. Focus on a few jobs that you actually want. Then tailor everything about your application to each specific job.

3. You're interviewing them too. Your goal should be to find a job that you actually care about and a company that you want to be a part of. If you focus on jobs like that, then the interview will be much better. You'll be genuinely engaged. You'll ask more questions because you're interested and not because —that's what you're supposed to do in an interview. Plus — and here's a crazy bonus — if you only apply to jobs that you look interesting, then you aren't going to end up in a job that you never actually wanted. Sort of makes you wonder why you're applying to a bunch of jobs that you aren't going to enjoy, right.

4. Realize that some things are of minimal benefit. If you really wanted, you could write out a list of 1000 things to remember for a job interview. Of course, most of them wouldn't really help you because some things just aren't that important. Your focus should be on solving problems for the company, on proving why you're the best candidate for the job.
